

- AC Automotive release the first ever fully EU Homologated Cobra Mark VI
- MacG Racing Ltd are appointed sole UK distributors for the AC Cobra Mark VI
- AC Automotive announce the development of FIA GT4, GT3 and GTE versions of the AC Cobra, which are being developed in collaboration with MacG Racing Ltd

MacG Racing Ltd, the UK's sole distributor of the current AC Cobra Brand, will be launching the first right-hand-drive, fully EU Homologated AC Cobra MK VI at The Autosport Show in January 2017.

Handbuilt in Germany, this is the first chance for petrolheads to see the latest version of the exquisite and powerful AC Cobra. AC Cars is one of the UK's oldest car manufacturers and was first established in 1901 when John Weller set up a garage in London to realise a passion for building cars. It was in 1903 that Weller, with the backing of wealthy businessman John Portwine, helped bring the concept to reality as Weller debuted two versions of his 'Autocar' at the British Motor Show that year – in a twin-cylinder 10-horsepower and a four-cylinder 20-horsepower configuration. For the first time in 1915, the abbreviation AC was used, and in November of that year a new company was formed called Autocarriers Limited.

Fast forward 101 years and the latest iteration of the AC Cobra, will be one of the stars of the Autosport Show. The Mk VI's engine is a 6.2-litre, 434bhp V8, enabling the stunning car to go from 0-62mph in just 3.7 seconds and reaching a top speed of 173mph (278 km/h). The car is fully homologated for worldwide sales and meets all current emission standards. Information will also be available on an FIA Homologated GT4 race car currently in development.

MacG Racing, a family run Motorsport and Engineering Team with over 15 years experience of running vehicles in various national level championships, will be launching the car as part of its activity at the Autosport Show in January on stand 19210. MacG Racing will also be displaying their range of products, including Albins Transmissions, Braid Wheels and Xtreme Clutches.

MacG Racing will be taking orders for the AC Cobra Mk VI at the Autosport show, and interest in such an iconic car and brand is expected to be high. Richard MacGregor, Team Principal of MacG Racing, said: "The AC Cobra is an iconic model which has remained extremely popular throughout its different versions. The MK VI retains all of the beauty and charm of the original AC Cobras, with a modern update."

"Previously only available in left hand drive, we are thrilled that we can now launch a version better suited to British roads and can't wait to introduce the right hand drive version of this incredible machine at the Autosport Show in January. Our Racing Team are also excited about our involvement in the development of the GT4 version and being able to race it in due course"
